This is an alternative and replacement for Ammonite Audio/MIDI recorder that is built into REAPER. Since you can write audio or MIDI notes to a REAPER project directly, you do not need to create a MIDI project first, and you can save the .midi files as separate files from the REAPER project file. To use the REAPER Midi recorder, first of all, start up the REAPER software. Next, you will need to first select the application where you want to open the Project. Then, select Open Project... to bring up the Open Project dialog box. In this dialog box, select the file where you want to save your REAPER project. Next, click Choose. The settings for this software are rather strange, so I will only tell you some of them. The first is the Total Duration setting. This is the length of your project from start to finish. I usually set this at 2 hours and 50 minutes. The second setting is Length of track. This is how many seconds you want each track to be. I usually set this at 6 minutes for each track. The next setting is the number of times to repeat a track. You can usually have up to 128 tracks in a REAPER project. For this software, I usually set this at 4, and then click OK to save the project. After you have recorded the audio, you will then be able to open the REAPER project file with the .xsp file extension. You can change the tracks and settings by right-clicking on a track or the entire project and selecting one of the following options: Load Project Click to open the file where you saved the project. You can also select Load Preset if you want to restore the project settings to its default state. Edit Project You will be able to add or remove tracks and edit the settings for each track. Save Project This will save the project with the .xsp file extension. Export Project This will save the project as a REAPER compatible (CK) file. Save Project as... This will save the project with a .cdr extension. Export Project as... This will save the project as a WAV file. [tie_more] [tie_more_end]
